It is no longer to be regarded as a fad, but is an important phase of municipal activity. It is an attempt to plan ahead, that the growth of the community may be orderly and may bring comfort and convenience to all citizens. The tendency of people to gather together in small areas has brought with it real problems. Health and order and civic welfare will not come of their own accord. They must be planned for wisely, and the problem of achieving them grows as the community grows. The civic problem of to-day is to provide for all citizens - not just a favored few - opportunity for normal living conditions, with sufficient light, air, sanitation and room for each individual, with provision also for recreation, education and esthetic development. This is the ultimate aim of town planning. The haphazard growth of cities has resulted in the necessity of replanning many areas, - a remedial method often attended by great opposition. This opposition must be overcome before much can be accomplished. Education is therefore a necessary part of town planning work. Town planning as a scientific study did not begin until the latter half of the nineteenth century, when Paris, under the leadership of Baron Haussman, became the pioneer city. The movement soon began to spread. Germany, England and the United States became interested, and soon books were being written and actual progress was made in the town planning field.
