Not illustrated. 1894 Excerpt: . . . A Legend of the Bells of Limerick Cathedral. Nos te laudamus Domine! Oer Arnos vale the music floats; Such melody from brazen throats Came neer before, the people say. Laudamus te: We praise Thee, Lord! We join with willing heart and tongue The hymn, to the far sky outflung; Laudamus te: We praise Thee, Lord. Nos te laudamus Domine! Still peals abroad the joyous chime; So may they ring thro countless time Those wondrous bells, first rung to-day. A The chimes had ceased; the last low wave of sound Had died upon the ears of that great crowd That thronged the convent garden, when there rose A whisper which, wide-spreading, quickly gained In volume, and at length became a cry, Demanding that the artist whose rare skill Had wrought such sound in metal, straight be brought To hear the praise that was so justly due, And reap a golden harvest for his pains. A hundred golden crowns were not too much; Nay, that twice told were scarce beyond the mark. What think you, neighbours 1 That he be from Rome 1 Or may he not be from beyond the Alps, From that far Rhine-land where I have heard tell They work in metals with a wondrous skill Such words as these were passing to and fro, When from the open door the Prior came, Supported by a noble stalwart youth, No stranger, but a townsman of their own, Monti, the dreamer, whom they all...
