Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Edward Orny Omolo and Kennedy Omolo have used their bicultural advantage to write a narrative on how the cruel culture of corruption, impunity, status quo, infidelity, poverty, ethnicity and tribalism in their fictitious home in Africa, a country called Konza, a country in which the contents about tribalism, corruption, and impunity dominate national dialogue. Edward and his brother are both sojourners, but they have found different paths through the maze of American culture. They don t want to get back to their home after living in the real world, a new country, where things made sense, where rules are obeyed and the basic logic of the universe apply. Returning home to a country, nothing made sense, no rules are obeyed, corruption is rampant. Now they have used their learning to see through the eyes of others that could lead to success in exposing corruption in their old home. They have used Ben Ondoro Nyageng o of Ongor town, a person who has battled with infidelity and corruption without success. Every person has an individual response to these vices and the path or strategy one chooses not to be acculturated by corruption depends on many things, their personality, their circumstantial or whether they are the people who plans to stay away from the vices. They seem to be in what is called is called rejection or separation of the old culture in favor of a new clean culture at the new home. Meanwhile they have moved towards assimilation, or rejection of their home culture in favor of the new one. They have experienced how these vices destroyed many lives, teenage girls, becoming victims of unplanned marriages that destined them...
